Additional Data: This is one of the old homesteads in Albany County which is now being occupied by the sixth or seventh generation of the early settlers of this county.

It is familiarly known in this section as the "Two-in-one" House, because the two buildings, while all built in one, look like two distinct houses. It is thought by many that the smaller house was the original, but the occupants claim that their ancestors built the large house first, and later added the smaller house for servants quarters.

The interior and exterior are practically unchanged since the time of erection, the mantels and woodwork being good.
